How We Work

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT & CEO AND THE CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

The theme for the 2017-2018 Annual Report is Impact. It starts with the impact of hunger on the lives of 400,000 people in our 31-county service area who are food insecure. Imagine the impact of not knowing if you'll have anything to eat today or tomorrow. Imagine how you would feel and, even worse, how you would feel as the parent of child with nothing to eat.

The impact of food insecurity and hunger are far reaching. They include children who can't concentrate in school and have higher rates of visits to the emergency room; adults who don't perform well at work and have high absenteeism; and seniors who experience more illnesses and may stay sick longer.

We see the impact of providing food to those in need every day. Our partner agencies tell us stories of clients who are able to take better control over their lives when they are not worried about having enough food. We learn about children who are excited to see their BackPack Box every Friday because they know they are going to have good food all weekend. And we see the tears of gratitude on the faces of our seniors when they receive a box of food and fresh produce.

The fiscal year had challenges and triumphs for Mid-South Food Bank. Through both we see the impact our work has on individual clients and families, on our Partner Agencies and on the communities we serve. Thanks to the generous support of our donors, sponsors and friends, coupled with the hard work of our team, we finished the year with total distribution of 13,002,919 pounds of food – a million pounds more than the previous year! That means more than 10.8 million meals for hungry children, families and seniors. Our Summer Harvest Program grew to serve the greatest number of families ever with needed nutrition during the summer months when kids are out of school and families need more help. We brought several new Partner Agencies on board to extend our impact into additional areas to help more people in need.

Most exciting was the official kick-off of the Hunger to Hope Capital Campaign for a new Mid-South Food Bank facility. We are continuing to raise funds, but construction has begun with a goal to move in the spring of 2019. We know the impact of the larger space and greater efficiencies in the new facility will be tremendous and we are looking forward to that new day.

Mahatma Gandhi said, "Be the change you want to see in the world." He was telling us that everything we do matters because we can make a difference in the lives of others. At Mid-South Food Bank, we know that, thanks to you, we can have an impact.

IMPACT: People in Need

Often, Mid-South Food Bank's impact can be exemplified by one family. Such is the case in Tipton County, Tennessee, where siblings receive assistance from the St. Luke Missionary Baptist Church food pantry. The food in security rate in Tipton County is 14.3%, or 8,770 people.

Tiffany Massey, 35, and her sister Paulette Lane, 47, often must access food at St. Luke's, in Covington, on the eastern end of the county amidst rows of cotton. The sisters enjoy getting together to pick up the food that helps them both get by. Typically, they receive grocery sacks filled with tuna, frozen meat, macaroni and cheese, canned vegetables and fruit juice.

Paulette started visiting the food pantry about five years ago, and her sister joined her one year ago. "We live a half a mile away from each other, and we both live alone, but we always come to the pantry together. It's our special time," Tiffany said.

For Paulette, the food effectively supplements her limited income. She works part-time for the health department. "The help is very nice and fills in for me when I fall short on paying bills," she said.

Tiffany is disabled so the food is very important to her. "It provides meals and helps me afford to pay my bills. Food stamps only last two weeks, so there's a gap that it fills," Tiffany said.

Both ladies said the assorted meats and variety of vegetables they receive are a key to sustaining their healthy diets.

The volunteers at the pantry also make their visit a pleasant experience. "The workers are very nice and very professional," Paulette said. Added Tiffany: "We know we are not the only ones who need this help. There are so many people we know in Tipton County who need this help. It's critical."

Sisters Paulette Lane and Tiffany Massey pick up food from their local food pantry.

IMPACT: Partner Agency

Case Management, Inc., in Memphis brings hope to individuals diagnosed with mental illness by providing services that will encourage them to maintain their self-worth, dignity, and independence. President and CEO Florence Hervery sees these services as part of their clients' coping mechanisms. The food pantry at Case Management is an example. "It is a life saver," says Hervery. "Most of our clients receive some sort of disability and many receive food stamps, but the food pantry helps bridge the gap when those benefits run short. We are grateful for our partnership with Mid-South Food Bank that allows us to offer this service."

Case Management's partnership with the Food Bank goes back 15 years. Hervery talked about one program in particular, Baby Love – a residential treatment center for mothers dealing with mental illness and substance abuse, and their children. Aside from helping them with immediate issues, the Baby Love program also aims to show mothers how to care for their child. "The food from the food pantry is healthy so we can teach mothers some basic nutrition, simple meal preparation, and help them learn the value of smart shopping for food," Hervery says.

"The impact our food pantry has on so many of our clients is immeasurable," Hervery said. "For low-income and no-income mentally ill people in Memphis and Shelby County, we wrap around them with all the basic necessities, and there is nothing more important than healthy food. We are so blessed to be a Mid-South Food Bank Partner Agency, which makes our food pantry possible."

Case Management President and CEO Florence Hervery and COO Arvella White at the agency's food pantry.

IMPACT: Community

In Lee County, Mississippi, vigorous efforts to combat its hunger problem have made a broad impact. The Tupelo Lee County Hunger Coalition, started jointly by the Tupelo Lee County Community Foundation, an affiliate of CREATE Foundation, and United Way of Northeast Mississippi, made a commitment to improve the lives of food-insecure children in Lee County in the summer of 2018.

Working with Mid-South Food Bank to access the food for their efforts, over 400 local volunteers and partners filled more than 6,000 boxes with food and distributed them to five sites across the county, primarily at schools. Each box of food contained enough food to supply seven breakfasts and seven lunches plus additional food for the families. Funding for the project was provided by the Marchbanks Fund at CREATE, Families First of Mississippi, and additional funding from by many local donors.

Hunger Coalition President Jason Martin coordinated the effort. He believes the impact of helping children who may not get enough to eat during the summer, when they don't receive free school meals, is significant. "Boxes of nutritious food were provided to 442 families, serving approximately 650 children," he said.

Diana Ezell, a Coalition board member, observed that while the project confronted child food insecurity head on, it also impacted the community by galvanizing its earnest willingness to help. "Many were unaware of food insecurity and hunger in our area. Now there is growing support with funds and volunteer time," she said. "A healthy community is the goal. By sharing resources and putting ideas together, we have just begun the journey but has it has improved the way the community serves those in need."

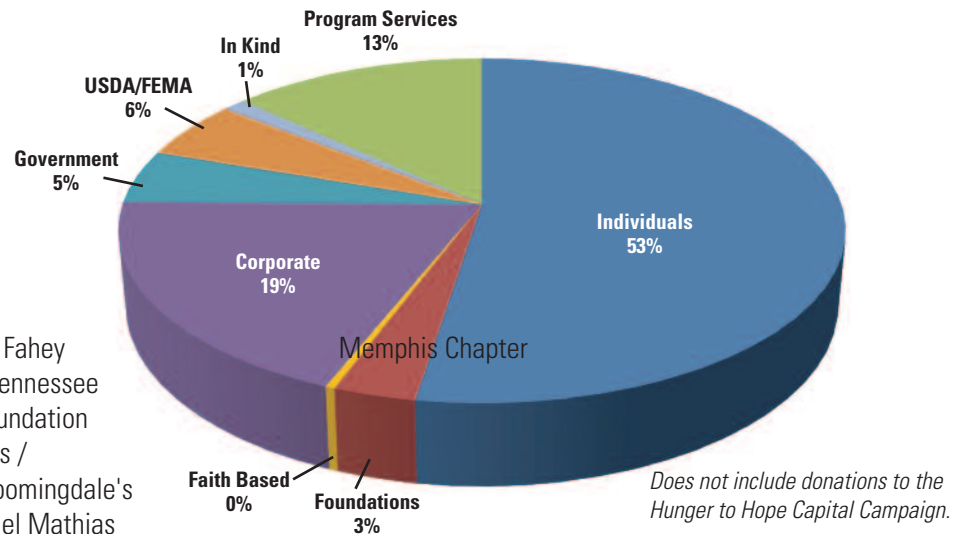

Sullivan and Wayne Goff were two of 300 volunteers who helped packed food boxes in Tupelo last summer.
